Executive Summary from Maureen’s final report:
Through the Rockefeller Center and support from the Class of 1964, I was able to serve as a Judicial Intern at the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest court of the United States. I worked within the Office of the Counselor to Chief Justice John Roberts Jr. which assists in his extrajudicial activities. My position was directly overseen by the Supreme Court Fellow. While at the Supreme Court I was able to attend oral argument sessions, compile daily memos summarizing the day’s judicial news which was then distributed to the Court, research foreign judiciaries and produce memos in preparation for international visits to the Court, and study Supreme Court history and current cases. My internship experience galvanized a love of the law and a passion for constitutional law. The internship allowed me to witness the ‘rubber meeting the road,’ where the academic theories and doctrines of constitutional law that I had been introduced to in my courses at Dartmouth intersected with the real world and cases with real consequences to which those academic principles would be applied at the highest level. The internship experience was engaging and stimulating, allowed for professional, personal, and academic growth, and left me committed to attending law school and pursuing a legal career in the future.

The internship experience has been impactful in many ways. It has helped me better understand many of the principles of my government and public policy courses. Additionally, my experience informed my research with the Center for the Presidency and Congress Fellowship. The internship at the Supreme Court helped to reinforce my passion for law and desire to become a lawyer. Additionally, working in a public policy organization such as the Supreme Court helped underscore the importance of public sector work and having a large impact across a broad community in a way that is personally and professionally enriching. I am incredibly thankful to the Rockefeller Center and the Class of 1964 for helping to make such an impactful experience a reality.
